

Overloaded Undergraduate Student

Role Summary

An undergraduate responsible for tracking and prioritizing overlapping assignment deadlines across multiple classes during a semester.

Primary Goal

Feel confident about what assignments are due and what to work on next so work can be completed on time without unnecessary stress.

Context of Use

This problem occurs during the semester when multiple classes have overlapping deadlines. It often happens when the student is deciding what to work on next, such as in the evening or between classes, while feeling rushed or stressed.

Key Pain Points

Important assignments are mixed in with non-actionable items, making it difficult to quickly identify what needs to be done. This uncertainty can lead to procrastination, rushed work, increased stress, and grade penalties.

Constraints

Limited free time due to academic and personal responsibilities, along with limited attention and focus when managing deadlines spread across different sources.

Why This Persona Matters

This persona frequently experiences stress and uncertainty when managing overlapping academic deadlines and represents the primary user most affected by this problem.
